CABS COST TEN CENTS A TRIP.

Special Correspondence of The Sunday Republic. Panama, June 18.—Bring out your camera and take some snapshots with you of Panama and the Panamanians.

Our first picture will be a daylight one in the heart of the city, but it is long after dark.

As we walk along we now and then meet a policeman.

Every family has its children, and the mothers are some of the best of mothers.

Suppose our camera to have an X-ray attachment. We look through the ground glass into the houses.

These Panamanians are good farmers, but they do not raise much of anything.

Our next snapshot is in the early light of the morning. Panama is awake.

The stores are now opening. Sleepy clerks are taking down the shutters.

IN THE PANAMA PLAZA. Dinner is the chief meal of the day.

AMONGST THE NATIVES. There are six ways to the park and make some notes of the people.

and imports and exports, is set down as worth something like a quarter of a million dollars.

It is such families that constitute the upper circles of Panama life.

Amongst the natives, one sees many monks and priests on the street and also a goodly number of nuns.
